The SDGs are designed to be integrated and indivisible, meaning that progress towards one goal can support progress towards other goals. For example, increasing access to education can help reduce poverty and hunger, and protecting the planet's biodiversity can help improve people's health and well-being.

The SDGs are also designed to be inclusive and leave no one behind, meaning that efforts to achieve the goals must be tailored to the specific needs of different countries, regions, and groups of people, and must take into account the different ways that different groups are affected by poverty, hunger, health and environmental problems, and other challenges.

Governments, civil society organizations, private sector, and individual citizens all have a role to play in achieving the SDGs. The UN encourages all actors to take action to achieve the goals, and to report on their progress through the Voluntary National Reviews.

The SDGs are ambitious, and achieving them will require significant efforts from all actors. However, it is crucial that we take action now to ensure that we leave a better world for future generations.

How can students learn about the UN's 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development?

One way students can learn about the UN's 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development is by visiting the official website of the United Nations, where they can find information about the 17 Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) that make up the agenda, as well as resources and tools to help them learn more. Additionally, students can seek out educational materials, such as books or lesson plans, that focus on the SDGs and sustainable development. They can also join clubs or organizations at their school or in their community that focus on environmental or social issues related to the SDGs. Finally, students can engage with the SDGs through research and volunteering opportunities that allow them to gain hands-on experience and contribute to sustainable development efforts in their local communities.

What is the contribution of the Council of Europe to the UN's 2030 SDG's?

The Council of Europe, a regional intergovernmental organization, contributes to the United Nations' 2030 Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) by promoting and protecting human rights, democracy, and the rule of law in its 47 member states. The organization also works to promote social inclusion, education, and cultural heritage, which align with several of the SDGs. For example, the Council of Europe's work on gender equality and violence against women aligns with SDG 5 (Gender Equality), while its work on youth participation and education aligns with SDG 4 (Quality Education). Additionally, the organization's work on preventing torture and inhumane treatment aligns with SDG 16 (Peace, Justice and Strong Institutions).
